HOFFMANN TO TESTIFY ON DEATH PENALTY LAW

On Tuesday, Dec. 3, Professor Joseph Hoffmann will appear before a committee of the Illinois Senate to testify about the "Fundamental Justice Amendment," a proposal that would affect the way the Illinois Supreme Court reviews death penalty cases. Professor Hoffmann was involved in drafting the amendment, which provides:

"In addition to any procedural grounds for relief from a death sentence that may otherwise be authorized by law, the Supreme Court shall, for first degree murder committed on or after the effective date of this amendatory Act of the 92nd General Assembly in which the death penalty is imposed, have the authority to overturn the death sentence, and order the imposition of a term of imprisonment under Chapter V of the Unified Code of Corrections, if it finds that the death sentence is fundamentally unjust as applied to the particular case. If the Supreme Court finds that the death sentence is fundamentally unjust as applied to the particular case, independent of any procedural grounds for relief, it shall issue a written opinion explaining this finding, but in no event shall such a finding serve as precedent for the appellate review of any other case in which a sentence of death is imposed."

The purpose of the amendment is to authorize the Illinois Supreme Court to review the facts and circumstances of every death penalty case, to make sure that the jury's decision on the merits of imposing the death penalty was correct. As explained in a proposed statement of legislative history that will accompany the amendment:

"This amendment provides the Supreme Court with a new kind of authority that it did not previously possess: the authority to reverse a death sentence that is fundamentally unjust, without any need to identify a procedural error at trial or sentencing to justify such a reversal. The kind of decision contemplated here is factual rather than legal in nature, and is essentially similar to the one made by the jury in the first instance: upon consideration of all of the facts and circumstances concerning the crime and the defendant, does the defendant deserve the death penalty? In our system of justice, the jury generally has the primary responsibility to make this decision. But when the death penalty is at issue, and when the consequences of error or misjudgment are so great, it seems appropriate to allow another decisionmaker to take a second look at the facts and circumstances, to ensure the fundamental justice of the death sentence imposed by the jury."

"This amendment is designed to eliminate any inappropriate pressure on the Supreme Court, in a case where the Court may feel that the death sentence is fundamentally unjust, to identify a procedural error to justify reversal of the death sentence. The amendment authorizes the Court, in such a case, simply to reverse the death sentence on the merits. This direct approach will produce fewer adverse systemic impacts than the current requirement of a finding of procedural error to justify a reversal. Such findings of procedural error affect many more cases than the one before the Court, and inevitably lead to reversal in some other cases even though the death sentence in such cases was completely justified. Findings of procedural error also inevitably lead to additional litigation over the complex procedural rules that govern whether, and when, various claims of procedural error can be raised on appeal and in post-conviction proceedings. This amendment is designed to reduce, in the long run, the current excessive emphasis on procedural litigation in capital cases by providing the Supreme Court with the authority to reverse fundamentally unjust death sentences on the merits, without regard to any procedural rules of any kind."

If the Illinois Senate adopts the amendment, it will then go to the Illinois House for consideration later in the week, and ultimately to the desk of Governor Ryan for his possible signature. If the amendment is not adopted this week, however, it will likely be re-introduced in the new Illinois legislature in January.

Professor Hoffmann also wrote an op-ed piece that was published in Sunday's Chicago Tribune, explaining the "Fundamental Justice Amendment" and advocating for its adoption.
